Power With, Not Power Over

“Nearly all [people] can stand adversity, but if you want to test [their] character, give [them] power.”

ABRAHAM LINCOLN

“It takes two to have a power struggle.”

JIM FAY
KEY CONCEPTS FOR COACHES

FIVE WAYS TEACHERS CAN PROMOTE POWER WITH, NOT POWER OVER

1. Empathizing with students can promote power with students.
2. Connecting with students through 1:1 conversations.
3. Listen intently to your students.
4. Communicate respect of your students.
5. Defuse conflict intentionally.

Turning Ideas Into Action

STUDENTS

1. Give the students the student survey.
2. Teach students listening skills and explain that it is your intention to model the practices in every class, every day.
3. Give students numerous opportunities to explain how they feel in class and how they would like the classroom to be adjusted to support their learning needs.

TEACHERS

1. Record your conversations (inside or outside of school) to see how effectively you listen.
2. Video record your classes to observe how well you use the power with strategies.
3. After you have been the victim of power over, write down as much as you can about your experience and consider how your students might feel if they were victims of power over.

INSTRUCTIONAL COACHES

1. Conduct a book-study using Chapter 11 of High Impact Instruction by Jim Knight and discuss such questions as these: “How would you define power over and power with? What does power with look like to you? How can we know for sure if we are doing power with?”
2. Conduct schoolwide surveys of students, assessing their perceptions of how often they experience power over, how psychologically safe they feel, and how much they think teachers care about them.
1. Commit to modeling power with during all of your interactions with people (children and adults) in the school.

2. Lead schoolwide conversations with staff to define power with and power over.

3. Once everyone can describe power with and power over and has committed to eliminating power over practices, be vigilant in naming power over when you see it.

What It Looks Like

Embracing power with, not power over, is as much about not doing certain things as it is about what not to do. If people embrace power with, they shouldn’t yell, belittle, interrupt, or bully others. If students feel they are respected, that should be reflected in surveys of student attitudes.
